The 78th Congressional docket includes many issues of vital importance to every U. S. citizen. Routine will be the appropriation of more than one hundred billion dollars, the largest ever requested in any one year, which will mean more taxes for everyone—individuals as well as corporations. Many of the more or more of legislative bills affecting manufacturers may not be enacted by this Congress; others will be materially modified.

One of the most sweeping proposals will be the disposition of manpower. Senator Austin of Vermont has already served notice that he will introduce a bill for compulsory national service. Although in favor of such service, Manpower Chief McNutt says the time has not yet arrived for invoking compulsion through legislation. He believes the solution to the problem is still possible through indirect penalties against industry.

In the labor field, proposals to outlaw the "closed shop" and strikes and to suspend the 40-hour week will be presented. Legislation will be asked to require compulsory accounting of union finances, prohibit union contributions to political parties, make unions subject to anti-trust prosecution, and create a statutory agency to assume WLB duties.

Included in tax proposals will be one to produce an additional 6 billion dollars in new revenue through higher individual and corporate income taxes with a sales tax to aid in making up the total. Strong sentiment has developed for a sales tax and a sharp fight is developing over the Ruml plan. In controversy is the $25,000 limit on income. The new revenue act is not likely to jell before April 1.

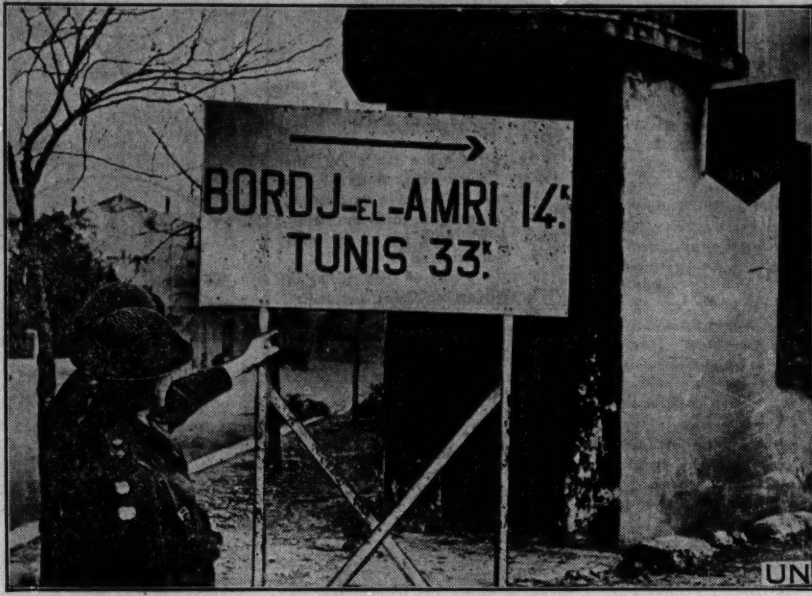

Congress, disposed to delay Revenue Act considerations until after April 1, may preclude Social Security extension of any importance this year, but proposals to increase unemployment compensation taxes, old age and survivors taxes, health and disability taxes, hospitalization taxes, and federalization of state unemployment compensation systems are expected.

Likely to be a high point of Congressional debate is an Administrative Reform Bill whose objective is to compel bureaucrats to follow laws drafted by Congress rather than hand down interpretations going beyond the intent of the legislature. This legislation, formerly known as the Walter-Logan bill, would provide for judicial review.

Commenting on the 412 feet of reports a manufacturer is required to fill out each year on one of scores of government forms, the Byrd Economy Investigating Committee said, "horizontally this is not quite twice the length of a football field, but vertically it is considerably higher than the great pyramid of Egypt."

For 35 minutes WLB members and disputants in a pending case went without lunch last week because WLB had been dilatory in granting employees of the Labor Department cafeteria a salary increase under a new union contract. WLB members and guests appeared in the cafeteria as the strike was called.

Proposals to establish a policy on the operation of government-owned or government-financed war plants, after the war, will also be brought before the 78th Congress.

NEAR THEIR GOAL, two officers of the British First Army of General Kenneth Anderson are shown here in a street at Tebourba, the scene of heavy fighting. They are examining a signpost showing they are only 21 miles from the strategic city of Tunis.

White Oak Community Club Held Meeting Monday Night

Hayden-Robinson

The regular monthly meeting of the White Oak Community Club was held at the welfare building, Monday night, January 18th with a good attendance. Mrs. J. E. Armfield, the president presided over the business meeting. Mrs. L. H. Bell read the minutes of the Christmas meeting and Mrs. H. A. Morris gave the treasurer's report. Other reports were given.

Miss Tilley made an urgent appeal for more surgical dressings. The Surgical Dressings which are sponsored by the Community Club meet each Tuesday night and Wednesday at the Women's department of the YMCA. The club also decided to sponsor a class in Food and Nutrition, which will meet on Monday and Wednesday nights from 6:30 to 7:30 at the Welfare building beginning next Monday night at 6:30.

Mrs. W. S. Moore was present and gave a Brush demonstration that was interesting. The club benefited from the proceeds of the demonstration. The hostesses, Mesdames J. O. Wheeler, Millard Leonard, Garland Flinton and Mrs. Catherine Moore served delicious ice cream.

The United States Is Building Aircraft Carriers

Large and small, escort vessels, landing boats and other kinds of Naval units "with a timing almost equal to the pre-war mass production of motor cars," the United States is building Aircraft Carriers, according to Admiral William D. Leahy, Chief of Staff to President Roosevelt.

Aircraft carriers, he revealed are now being constructed in 17 months, about half the former time. We are now completing submarines in approximately a year, also one-half the pre-war time. Modern destroyers are being built in six months, one-third the time it formerly took, and battleships, which formerly required five years, are being turned out in three.

White Oak News

Mrs. John Marshall, who was Miss Millicent Armfield before her recent marriage, spent the week end in Moultrie, Ga., with her husband, Sgt. John Marshall, who is with the Air Corps there.

Mrs. G. A. Sikes who has been confined to her home since the recent snow when she fell on the ice and fractured some ribs is slowly improving at her home.

Marine Escapes From Hideout Also Occupied With 16 Japanese

Isolated from his comrades when Japanese counter-attacked Marines seizing Tulagi Island, in the Solomons, Corporal Robert B. Page, U.S.M.C., of Brooklyn, New York, ducked under a house.

To escape "Leatherneck" machine gunners, 16 Japanese riflemen—some wounded—soon crawled in with Page. It was before dawn. Page lay unrecognized in the inky darkness. He didn't move. When the wounded Japs groaned, he groaned, too.

His desperate game seemed up as the morning light grew brighter. He began inching his way out of the hideout. A Jap officer nearby, recognizing him, opened fire. Other Japs followed suit. Page was struck in the leg.

He managed, however, to get out from under the house and yell. Guided by his cries, nearby Marine machine gunners directed their fire under the house, and all 16 Japs were annihilated.

Students Work Helps

Students of typing and shorthand in a Wisconsin school made a war contribution by typing 8,000 transcripts of questionnaires to be used in determining distribution of food ration books.

Explanation Of The Ration Banking Program Is Given

The following answers—explaining the ration banking program which will be established on a nation-wide basis this month—were released today by the Office of Price Administration in response to questions asked by storekeepers, gasoline wholesalers and others.

1. (Q) When will ration banking go into effect?
(A) On January 27, 1943.

2. (Q) What rationed commodities will it cover?
(A) In the food group—coffee and sugar. In the oil group—gasoline but not fuel oil.

3. (Q) Will the program be extended to include other rationed commodities?
(A) Yes. Ration banking will be applied later to other ration programs, including the point plan which is scheduled to go into effect next month.

4. (Q) What is ration banking?
(A) It is a banking operation that utilizes the facilities of the nation's commercial banking system for handling and safeguarding ration stamps, coupons and certificates after they have passed out of the hands of consumers into trade channels.

5. (Q) Will consumers be affected?
(A) No. They will continue, as at present, to get their ration stamps, coupons and certificates from the local war price and rationing boards and to spend them in stores and elsewhere for the rationed commodities they are authorized to buy.

6. (Q) What tradespeople and others will come under the ration banking program?
(A) In foods. All primary distributors, wholesalers and chain stores, and also retailers whose December (1942) sales of all foodstuffs totaled $5,000 or more must open ration bank accounts. Retailers whose sales totaled less than $5,000 may do so if they want.

In gasoline. All wholesalers, distribu-

Miss Eva Phillips of the Packing room and Mr. Billy Kincaid of the Packing room were married last week end, and we extend our congratulations and best wishes for their happiness. . . . Mrs. Brenda Cole is back working in the Office, having found a cook. . . . Miss Sadie Garner's boy friend is looking forward to a far-future in the near future. . . . Mr. Horry's newest automobile is approaching the condition of the famous "Horrycar" of the depression. The Horrycar was famous for many performances, perhaps the most outstanding being the time it lost its gas tank on Summit Avenue, turned around and went back and tied the tank on, and it's owner was never late for work on account of this or its other vagaries.

The newest Horrycar is reported to have stopped in the middle of Summit avenue, but the reason has not been divulged. We did notice in passing that the bumper was insecurely fastened to the rear of the car, and when the car was being pushed to the garage for examination, the bumper fell off. This was not serious because the bumper, like the gas tank, was quickly replaced.

And while on the subject of cars, it is only fair to say that the Horrycar was a competitor, an old Ford belonging to Mr. Souther. The stories about the Ford are hard to get, but we expect to have one of them for you in the near future. Fortunately for the writer of this column, both Mr. Horry and Mr. Souther take jokes about their automobiles in the best of spirits, and we really believe they should be congratulated on sharing with us the lighter side of life when times are so sad in lots of ways. For example, last week we reported the visit of Junior Johnson, and eight after he left here he was killed in a bus accident which made us feel terrible, and we extend sympathy to his family. . . . Mr. Sydney Cone brought the story back from New York about the Lady who carried a big bowl of apple butter out into the yard to cool, slipped, and sat down in it. Later on a neighbor asked her husband whether she had been injured by the accident, and he said "No, it just put her behind in her work."

It is probable, however, that few German housewives will dare to give their maids time off, or treat them humanely, even if they wish to. In the Nazis' book, any kindness towards one of these unfortunate Polish girls is a crime against the state, and several German women have been sent to jail for such "unworthy friendliness."

The household slaves have no personal rights of any kind. They may not go to church except once a month. They must never speak Polish. They cannot marry. And, as one German paper put it, "Nobody is responsible for guarding their honor but they themselves."

But though they are treated as slaves, most of these Polish girls have consistently refused to accept the part. Standing up for their rights and dignity as human beings, several have been executed because they refused to obey their "employers" and quarreled with them. Others have been sent to prison for nothing more than singing Polish songs in the kitchen. Of those who have rebelled against the Nazi slavery and suffered for it, only a few are known. Until the Nazi are conquered, they must stand as the symbols for all the other unknown ones who have refused to forget freedom.

Polish Girls Work As Slaves in Nazi Kitchens

Laboring all month for a quarter of the normal wage, Polish girls forced to work as housemaids in Germany are living today in conditions of actual slavery, another example of the cruelty and exploitation which are at the base of Hitler's plans for his "New Europe".

Not only are the Polish girls paid as little as $2.65 a month, but they are also denied the right to have any time off. According to the regulations of the Reich Labor Trust, as a special reward a maid may be given a "special reward" for efficiency of a free afternoon.

It is probable, however, that few German housewives will dare to give their maids time off, or treat them humanely, even if they wish to. In the Nazis' book, any kindness towards one of these unfortunate Polish girls is a crime against the state, and several German women have been sent to jail for such "unworthy friendliness."

WHITE OAK
REVOLUTION

Greensboro, North Carolina, Friday, January 22, 1943

The Tax Situation

The latest information from Washington indicates that regardless of what Congress does in connection with the "pay as you go" tax plan, it will be necessary for all parties who are due to pay income taxes for 1942 to make out the returns by March 15 and pay the first quarter of the taxes.

Inasmuch as the press and radio are giving out much information in regard to the attitude of the President and Congress in regard to the "pay as you go" tax plan, there is a likelihood that some confusion may be in the minds of the taxpayers as to whether they will have to pay any taxes on 1942 income or whether they will merely pay taxes on earnings this year at the time they receive their compensation.

Insofar as we have been able to determine and as stated above, the first quarterly payment on the taxes due for 1942 will have to be paid on March 15, and we, therefore, urge all of our readers to make their arrangements to meet this tax payment.

It is probable but not assured that after March 15 some "pay as you go" plan will be put into effect, as both Congress and the President now seem to be favorable to such a plan. If this is done, there is a further chance that the remainder of the taxes due for the year of 1942 will not have to be paid this year, but, of course, the amount that would be collected for the remaining three-quarters of this year on earnings of 1943 would be greater than the remaining taxes due for the year of 1942.

As we stated last week, we feel that the tax situation is of sufficient importance for this paper to constantly call it to the attention of its readers, and it is not because we are trying to wish taxes on our readers but solely because we feel that they should be kept informed and make preparations so as to avoid inconvenience and trouble later on, as the Government will collect its taxes.

A Worthwhile Proposal

The Greensboro Tuberculosis Association has been in conference with representatives of the United States Department of Health and the North Carolina Department of Health in regard to a proposal submitted by the two health departments to furnish X-ray services for citizens of Greensboro in order to further combat and control that dreaded disease, tuberculosis.

Several of the industries in Greensboro, including the Cone Mills, have become interested in the proposal, as it is felt that the citizens of Greensboro are entitled to every protection against tuberculosis.

If satisfactory arrangements can be made, it is proposed that the employees of industries in Greensboro be given the opportunity and privilege of being X-rayed. Nothing is compulsory about it, and in no case will the employers come into the picture other than to assist the above mentioned organizations by providing a place and allowing employees sufficient time to have the X-rays made.

The reports from the findings after the X-rays are made will be made to the private doctors of each individual person and will not be made to the employers.

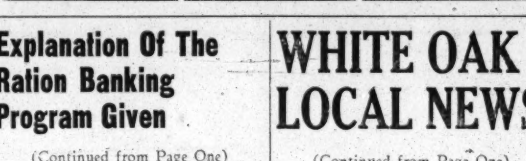

Full details have not been worked out as yet, however, after they have been perfected this paper will cooperate in bringing them to the attention of its readers.

We believe this is a very worthwhile proposal, and we hope that it can be satisfactorily put into effect.

Many dangerous diseases of the past have been completely eliminated in this country, and we hope by such means as have now been proposed we can finally completely eliminate tuberculosis, not only in Greensboro but in the whole nation.

lowing. Sugar, coffee and later for processed foods when point rationing goes into effect.

12. (Q) Does the grocer (or other qualified depositor) have to maintain a minimum balance in his ration bank account?

(A) No. And once he makes his ration deposit, the grocer may begin drawing against it immediately. However, he is cautioned to watch his balance carefully. A ration check must be covered by the ration bank balance at the time the check is written. An overdraft is a serious Federal offense.

13. (Q) Do ration credits (created by the deposit in a ration bank account of stamps, coupons and certificates) expire if they are not spent within a specified time limit?

(A) No. Such credits—unlike most stamps, coupons and certificates which are not valid after specified time limits—are valid at any time after the deposit is made.

14. (Q) Are commercial banks required to open ration bank accounts?

(A) No. However, it is believed that almost all will do so because of a desire to render a public service. Representative bankers, including a ration banking committee appointed by the American Bankers Association, and Federal and state banking supervisory agencies cooperated with the OPA in establishing the ration banking system.

15. (Q) Has ration banking been tried out before?

(A) Yes. In Albany, Troy, Schenectady and surrounding communities in New York State where ration banking has been subjected to the test of actual operation since October 28, 1942. It has also been applied in England. Here and abroad the results are good.

16. (Q) Will the commercial banks, under ration banking, supersede the local War Price and Rationing Boards?

(A) No. Local boards will continue to have the same jurisdiction and possess the same authority over rationing that they have now.

17. (Q) Will ration banking help local boards?

(A) Yes. It will relieve them of a heavy burden of detail work. After January 27 they will no longer make exchanges of ration stamps and coupons for certificates. They will have more time to dispose of other ration matters.

18. (Q) Will ration banking services cost ration depositors anything?

(A) No. The government will reimburse the banks for all expenses.

19. (Q) Would it be practicable for the Government to create its own system for clearing transactions in ration stamps, coupons and certificates?

(A) It would be difficult for the Government to acquire the equipment and trained personnel needed to handle such a large scale and technical operation, and the cost would be great. It is much less expensive to utilize the existing commercial banking machinery.

Reading & Writing

by Edwin Seaver & Robin McKown

East may be East and West may be West, but some of those old Oriental sages would be right at home in America with our own cracker-barrel philosophers. For instance, here are some ancient Indian proverbs from "The Wisdom of China and India," a big, new anthology edited by Lin Yutang.

"Men who say what is pleasant are always welcome, but those who tell unpalatable truths will not find an audience."

"There is not much cleverness required to deceive one who has confidence in us, nor is much courage required to kill one who is asleep."

"He who has money has friends; he who has money has wisdom; in fact, he is a man of importance."

Or take this parable, which comes from China of many centuries ago:

An owl met a quail, and the quail asked, "Where are you going?" "I am going east," was the owl's reply. "May I ask why?" then asked the quail. "The people of the village hate my screeching noise," replied the owl. "That is why I am going east." Then said the quail, "What you should do is to change that screeching noise. If you can't, you will be hated for it even if you go east."

In seventeenth century China there was a philosopher who signed himself "Mr. Tut-Tut." Lin Yutang says he was the Chinese equivalent of our Benjamin Franklin:

"So long as I have legs," said Mr. Tut-Tut, "so long as I have eyes, wherever I go I am the lord of the mountains and rivers and the winds and the breeze."

And here's a fine saying by the modern Chinese writer, Lu Hsiang:

"Hope is like a road in the country; there was never a road, but when many people walk on it, the road comes into existence."

There is a feast of good reading in "The Wisdom of China and India"—poetry, stories, fables, and the writings of the Chinese and Indian religious leaders. Much of the material, Lin Yutang has translated into English for the first time.

Those who read Robert Trumbull's book-of-the-month, "The Raft," the story of the three navy men who spent thirty-four days at sea on a rubber raft, will remember that the name of the island where the men finally landed was not mentioned. Now, however, Robert J. Casey in his "Torpedo Junction" reveals this former military secret. The island, he says, was Puka-puka. And if your knowledge of geography is like ours, you'll know as much as you did before.

"Hope is like a road in the country; there was never a road, but when many people walk on it, the road comes into existence."

There is a feast of good reading in "The Wisdom of China and India"—poetry, stories, fables, and the writings of the Chinese and Indian religious leaders. Much of the material, Lin Yutang has translated into English for the first time.

Those who read Robert Trumbull's book-of-the-month, "The Raft," the story of the three navy men who spent thirty-four days at sea on a rubber raft, will remember that the name of the island where the men finally landed was not mentioned. Now, however, Robert J. Casey in his "Torpedo Junction" reveals this former military secret. The island, he says, was Puka-puka. And if your knowledge of geography is like ours, you'll know as much as you did before.

Hints on Honey
Honey is surely one of the good things of life—a pure food, given freely to man by a beneficent nature, in a finished, perfect form. History is studded with references to honey, for since ancient times man has been savoring the pleasures of the honey pot.

Moses, leading the Children of Israel through the wilderness, promised a land flowing with milk and honey. The Gods on Mt. Olympus lived on ambrosia, of which honey was a mythical ingredient. Attic honey, made from wild thyme growing on the slopes of Mt. Hymettus, has been celebrated throughout the centuries for its delicacy and fragrance.

In medieval and modern European cookery, honey has played an important and dramatic part. But, curiously, in our own country honey has had an up-and-down career. The bee was not native to this land; so, until the early settlers imported the first hiveful, there was no natural honey here. The Indians, marvelling at this strange new source of sweet, called the honey bee the "white man's fly".

Once arrived here, the honey bee went wild, and it was no time at all until the pioneers were following the flights of bees throughout the forest, hunting hollow tree trunks where precious honey had been stored. They used variously for many years in cooking.

After the development of sugar refining and the improvement of the sugar beet, honey was almost forgotten as a sweetener and flavoring agent. Sugar rationing, however, has restored it to its former glory and today we are re-learning the art of honey cooking. Honey may be used in many different kinds of dishes. It gives a subtle flavor and pleasing moisture to breads and cakes and cookies. It is superb in salad dressings. As a candied glaze on vegetables honey is a clever variation. Fresh fruits, stewed in honey, taste like mythical ambrosia. And ice creams made with honey are super-smooth and savory. If you would like to try some honey cookery yourself start here:

READING and WRITING

By Edwin Seaver and Robin McKown

If you still have any misconceptions about the Land of the Rising Sun, then read "Report From Tokyo" by Joseph C. Grew, our Ambassador to Japan from 1932 to 1941.

Ambassador Grew returned to the United States last August after spending many anxious months as a virtual prisoner of the Japanese. He came back on the Swedish exchange ship Gripsholm, along with many other Americans—missionaries, teachers, newspaper correspondents, and businessmen—who had spent the preceding six months in solitary confinement in small, bitterly cold prison cells, inadequately clothed and inadequately fed, and at times subjected to the most cruel and barbaric tortures.

When Ambassador Grew arrived in America, he was shocked to find how dangerously most Americans underrated the Japanese. He believes that the Germans will crack—as they did in 1918—when the tide of battle turns against them. But he does not think that is true of the Japanese.

"I know Japan," he writes, "I know the Japanese intimately. The Japanese will not crack. They will not crack morally or psychologically or economically, even when eventual defeat stares them in the face. They will pull in their belts another notch, reduce their rations from a bowl to a half bowl of rice, and fight to the bitter end."

The Japanese Imperial House, Upton Close tells us in his book "Behind the Face of Japan," is unquestionably the richest ruling house in the world. Once Mr. Close made the mistake of asking a Japanese minister to give him an estimate of the wealth of the Son of Heaven. "That," the minister replied sternly, "has never been reckoned, and never will be. Never before has it been requested, and I trust never again will be."

DO YOU HAVE "SINUS"?

Those of us who have sinus trouble are probably suffering one of the penalties of civilization.

The sinuses, of course, are air chambers in the bones of the head which open through passages into the inside of the nose. There are many of them, but the ones we hear most about usually are the antrum sinuses, on either side of the nose, and the frontal sinuses, which are quite extensive cavities between the outer and inner plates of the bones of the forehead.

Ordinarily, part of the function of the sinuses is to help filter, purify, and warm the air before it goes to the lungs. But, in these days in gregarious living in crowded cities, they often find their task more than they can handle because of the many germs in the air. Thus, the very fact that we are "civilized" may be a cause of our sinuses acting up.

A Common Ailment
Almost everybody has a little sinus trouble in varying degrees during his lifetime.

It is well known, however, that persons who work indoors all the time in crowded rooms where the air is stale or dusty and the temperature too high or too low are more likely to develop sinus infections than farmers and others who manage to stay outdoors a great deal.

People who live in climates where the atmosphere contains chemical or other irritants, and where the winter season brings cold weather with it, are particularly susceptible to sinusitis, or inflammation of one or more of the sinuses. But cold air alone will not cause an infection, as it must also contain infectious material to cause trouble.

Many people wonder why they feel tired in winter, why they have poor appetites and aches and pains in the joints and limbs. The trouble may be sinusitis.

See Your Doctor

A doctor should always be consulted when any of these symptoms occur severely or chronically, or if one has headache, dizziness, ringing in the ears, or constant discharge of matter into the throat.

Of course, the trouble may not be sinus. But the doctor may want to give you a thorough examination to make sure. He may also examine you by transillumination in a dark room to see whether the sinuses are clear, or he may take an x-ray.

In these and other ways he alone can detect trouble early and help avoid serious complications.

Not to Be Tolerated

Trouble with the sinuses is not a condition you can afford to ignore. Besides headaches, constant drainage of mucus, and other unpleasant symptoms, there is always the danger of infection extending into the ear and mastoid.

The constant inhalation of pus may result in bronchitis or pneumonia, also. An infection of the nose may be carried by the blood to other parts of the body, and infection of the heart, kidneys, or joints may result. The teeth may likewise be affected.

Prospects for Relief

If the condition is troublesome, your doctor may prescribe office treatments to clear the sinuses, or home treatments such as hot or steam baths, or inhalation of the vapors of certain medications.

Correcting the diet may be an effective method of helping clear up the source of difficulty.

Occasionally it is necessary to resort to surgery for the relief of sinus infections.

Whatever the case may be, prescribe

SPEAKING OF HEALTH

By DR. VICTOR G. HEISER

Medical Consultant Nation Association of Manufacturers

THE AIR YOU BREATHE

Today we can usually take it for granted that the water and milk we drink and the food we eat are protected against the presence of harmful bacteria.

Our public water supplies are chlorinated to kill harmful bacteria. Our milk is pasteurized in order to destroy all disease-causing bacteria which might find their way into "nature's most perfect food."

And our solid foods, be they canned or frozen or fresh are prepared for public consumption under the most cleanly conditions to keep out the "germs."

But how about the air we breathe?

Air-Borne Enemies
It is now known that some disease-causing bacteria and viruses can remain suspended in the air for an indefinite period.

It is possible to catch a cold, for instance, not only by direct contact with a person who has one, but by breathing in the infection from the air into which cold-causing organisms have been discharged.

Experiments have shown that diseases other than the common cold that can be transmitted via the air route are such infections as smallpox, influenza, and pneumonia, and some of the maladies of childhood such as measles, chicken pox, and mumps.

Defense Against Infection

If disease-causing infection floats through the air and may at any time be present in the air we breathe, what defenses can we put up to protect ourselves against it?

First, keep up your bodily resistance by keeping fit. Eat enough of the right kinds of food, get plenty of sleep in order to keep rested, get a little exercise each day, take cold baths or showers following your regular bath to toughen you up, and get as much sunshine and fresh air as you can.

Air the rooms you live in frequently and thoroughly in order to replace air that might be germ-laden with new, fresh air from outdoors.

Keep your skin scrupulously clean. Infection can enter the blood-stream through the smallest imaginable cut and attack you from within. Pay particular attention to your hands. Always wash them before eating.

But perhaps a new defense we have today against infection in the air may be found in a discovery made recently by medical science and now being developed by industry.

Infection-Free Air

It has been demonstrated that a lamp which is similar in many respects to the familiar "sun lamp," but which gives out ultraviolet rays of shorter wave length, will kill or inhibit harmful bacteria and viruses that may be in the air. It is installed above regular light fixtures in a room.

Hospitals have for some time been using germicidal lamps in operating rooms to kill infectious agents in the air. But not until recently has wide success been reported in the use of such lamps in purifying the air in places where people gather, work, and live.

Conquering the Common Cold

One department store installed germicidal lamps and recently reported that, "after the installation, no new colds developed among our office employees."

Experiments have been made in dormitories of an Eastern school which show that students who were exposed to air-borne germs in classes all day, but who breathed air protected by germicidal lamps all night, contracted fewer colds. Other equally interesting tests have been made.

The eradication of the common cold may eventually come from a combination of preventive measures, including possibly the widespread use of germicidal lamps in homes, offices, factories, public buildings, and conveyances, to purify the air.

But for the present, the real solution probably lies in the individual's making himself resistant to colds. If we can do this by a program of positive health we can eradicate a disease whose 400,000,000 cases a year cost us half a billion dollars and untold hours lost from work—time and money that could far better be used today toward winning the war.

Industrial America In This War

During the past twelve months the whole complexion of America has changed. A peaceful nation drawn suddenly into the vortex of a world-wide war has, in this short period, become the most gigantic armory the world has ever known.

So rapid has been this transformation and so dynamic the force behind it that in one year's time United States production has outstripped the vast production machines built by our enemies over a period of ten years.

Last week three great metropolitan newspapers, The New York Times, The New York Herald Tribune, and The Wall Street Journal, paid tribute to this amazing industrial achievement by devoting special supplements to the herculean task American industry has accomplished.

On the pages of these supplements there is unfolded the amazing picture of American industry at all-out war, of mammoth plants built overnight or converted to straight-line munitions production, making records only to be shattered and shattered again, utilizing every scientific development born of the war, employing inventions and shortcuts to amaze even this sophisticated age.

Reviewing the situation as a whole, War Production Chief Donald M. Nelson declared that "During the first year of war the United States got the bulk of its tremendous industrial facilities on an all-out basis." More specifically we learn that the steel industry set the all time record production of 89,000,000 tons of ingots. The American aircraft manufacturers produced 49,000 airplanes of all types and are well on the way to the creation of the world's most powerful striking force.

During 1942 machine tool production reached the all-time high of $1,400,000,000 which is 82 per cent more than 1941, 210 per cent greater than 1940, and seven times the sales of 1939.

The year 1942 saw the production of 32,000 tanks and self-propelled artillery units, 17,000 anti-aircraft guns, and 8,200,000 deadweight tons of merchant shipping. Huge increases in every war category are recorded on the production books of 1942.

Nazi Prisoners in Norway

An increasing number of Nazi soldiers, both officers and men, are being imprisoned in camps in northern Norway, according to Norwegian authorities in London. Eye witnesses who have seen the captives report that they are being even more brutally treated than Russian war prisoners.

The number of Nazis being sent back from the northern front in Russia is so large that the German authorities have recently taken steps to avoid publicity and have started shipping them to the prison camps in small batches.

lating literature inciting his people to revolt. But Rizal, dead, proved to be more dangerous than Rizal, alive. When news of his execution reached them, Filipinos throughout the land took up arms against Spain. By the time the Americans appeared, the revolutionists had defeated all the Spanish forces in the islands, except for Manila and a few scattered garrisons, even though the Spaniards were much better armed.

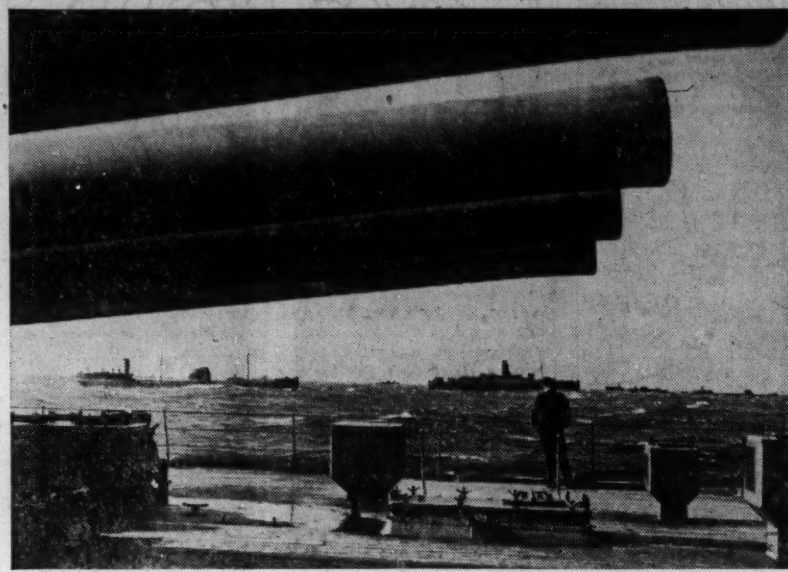

The Filipino fighters on Luzon and Batavia, in 1941, proved no less determined than their forebears. Twenty thousand of them died in the fight to hold back a Japanese army superior in numbers and equipment. Proud of their freedom and their democratic government, the Filipinos fought side by side with American troops in the Philippines.

Today, although the Japanese have overrun most of the Philippines, they continue to wage vigorous warfare from the hills and forests of Luzon, Visayas and Mindanao. They know that full Philippine independence is assured by United States law, and that the whole world sees in this promise—and in the record behind it—a symbol of the United Nations' intention to guarantee to all peoples the right to choose the form of government they prefer.

THIS BUSINESS OF Living

BY SUSAN THAYER

FREEDOM OF CHOICE

"Oh dear, oh dear," I complained to great Aunt Matilda, "look at this. Eight thousand different articles to be simplified. You know what that means, don't you?"

"Yes, they're going to cut down on styles and colors and folderols until the war is over."

"And make us all look and eat and fix our houses just alike. Why I've always been able to find something different for my table by keeping my eyes open and hunting around."

The old lady who had kept house in a much simpler day nodded her wise head and said, "Yes... the manufacturers of this country have catered to everybody's tastes pretty successfully. They've turned out an amazing variety of merchandise all right. Why even a queen a century ago hadn't the choice that women like you have had all of your lives. Now for a while you're going to have to get along with just necessities, I guess. And incidentally, they would have been luxuries in my day. But you mustn't complain, you know."

"I know. It's a war measure and they say by simplifying just these 8,000 articles millions of men will be freed for essential war activity in factories, on farms, and in the armed services. So I guess we'll just have to get along with one kind of paint, and one shade of glass container, and one kind of photograph equipment, and one kind of pie plates and wrenches. Those are some of the things to be simplified."

Until after the war is won. Then you must see that the manufacturers have the chance to expand again and use all of their ingenuity and skill to please all of their customers by producing a variety of articles. Freedom of choice has always been your right. It's part of the American way of doing things. See that you get it back again as soon as industry stops working on planes and ships and tanks and guns which are all that matter just now.

"I've lived a long time, and I've seen our standard of living go up and up and women's lives get more interesting and worthwhile. One reason for this has been an ever-widening freedom of choice. After the victory insist on it as well as on those other great freedoms of speech and religion and the ballot on which America is founded."

Moscow Schoolchildren Produce War Materials

Gun parts, clothing, packing cases, electrical equipment and other materials for the Red Army are being produced by boys and girls between 12 and 15 in hundreds of "children's workshops", operated by the Moscow school system.

The workshops, which are purely voluntary, began when a number of students asked the Education Department for an opportunity to do something useful for Russia's war effort. Many thousands of children now work in the shops, and there are more applications for work than there is space in the shops. One reason for this is that in most families the father has gone to the front and the mother is working in a war factory, so that there is little for the children to do at home.

About 40 percent of the output of the shops is war production, the rest is made up of non-essential items like toys and fine needlework.

The work is not allowed to interfere with regular studies, and some shops have classrooms adjoining.

For all the work the children do in the shops they are paid at the full adult rate. In addition they are given adult ration cards like any grownup who is at work on war production.

Time To Check Up

While there is no disposition on the part of the American people to appear miserly or over-conservative in an all-out war effort, many hard-hit taxpayers will be glad to know that the 78th Congress will soon be investigating government spending not only for the support of non-essential activities but for war activities as well.

President Roosevelt has put up to Congress the job of deciding which activities of the government are essential and which should be eliminated or cut down.

Believing that the time has arrived to go much further than the elimination of unnecessary activities by shaking down some of the war agencies to see if economies could be made in that field, Senator Taft recently made the following statements:

"The War Production Board has 19,000 employees and probably could do a much more efficient job if it were reorganized and had about 5,000 fewer workers."

"Similarly, the Office of Price Administration has about 40,000 employees and it is likely that a lot of them are falling over each other's feet."

"It's up to Congress now," the Senator from Ohio continued, "not only to limit non-war expenditures but to see to it that war expenditures are made efficiently."

Mr. Taft said he thought that one of the greatest sources of wastefulness lay in the duplication of efforts of various government bureaus. He had been told, he said, the five government agencies were carrying on similar programs in many Latin-American nations.

American Cigarettes Help Solve Landing Problem in North Africa

American cigarettes and American ingenuity helped solve one of the many problems of getting vital supplies ashore to United States troops after they had established a beach head on the North African coast.

Ensign Stephen L. R. McNichols, U. S. Coast Guard Reserve, was aboard one of the two Coast Guard transports which landed U. S. troops on a rocky beach 15 miles north of Casablanca on the morning of November 8. After the Coast Guardsmen had successfully ferried the troops from the transport to the shore, they tackled the problem of carrying in the tons of supplies needed to maintain the landing forces.

The crew of the transport, exhausted by hours of driving their landing barges through enemy gunfire and around hidden reefs, were making a slow job of it. In contrast Ensign McNichols noted, the scores of Arabs who had appeared from nowhere to beg for cigarettes, were the most active people on the beach. After a few minutes of dickerings, he was able to organize a labor battalion with a fixed wage of one cigarette an hour. Thereafter, the goods were quickly transported to the satisfaction of all hands. The wiry, smoke-starved Arabs were pleased with the bargain and the weary crew of the transport got a well-earned rest.

Philippine Guerillas Continue To Fight

Thousands of Filipinos still carry on the Battle of the Philippines against the Japanese invader under the inspiration of the greatest Filipino hero, Dr. Jose Rizal, who gave his life for Philippine freedom forty-six years ago, on December 30th, 1896.

The Filipinos, along with small units of Americans, are uncaptured remnants of the forces which waged the heroic battle of Bataan under General Douglas MacArthur. The Filipino fighters are members of the Philippine Army trained by General MacArthur, upon invitation of President Manuel L. Quezon, with the approval of President Roosevelt.

Nearly every day, the Japanese-controlled radio admits the damage done by these fighters. They come out of their mountain fastnesses to make forays on enemy supply stores and communication lines. The strength of this continued resistance is indicated by frequent Axis reports of battles fought, Filipino patriots captured or executed, and reprisal punishments carried out on whole towns.

Jose Rizal was the Filipino leader who first unified his countrymen against alien oppression. The anniversary of his execution by the Spaniards will be observed throughout the occupied Philippines as a spur to Filipino determination to resist the enemy.

Rizal was publicly executed in 1896, after he had been convicted of cir-

Save fuel too—gas, oil, coal. They are badly needed in the war effort.

Since it takes considerable coal to heat a church for a funeral service, why not use our funeral home? It is always warm, comfortable, and ready for use.
